

PONKIDOODLE

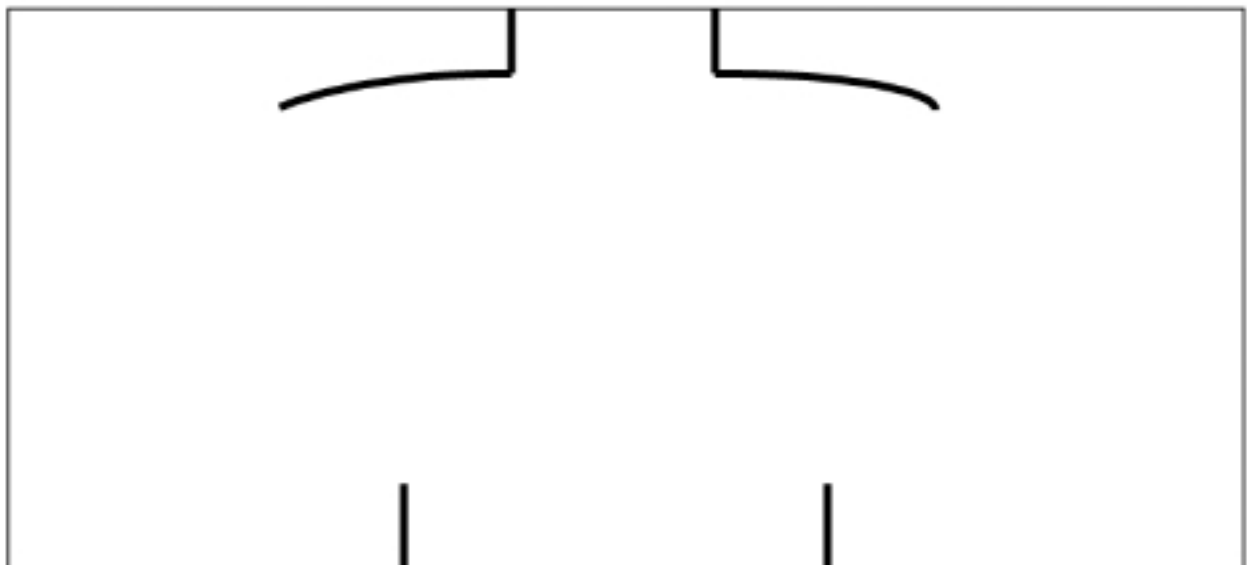

Neridah McMullin and Aaron Pocock must have vivid imaginations to come up with Ponkidoodle and bring him to life. You are going to draw a unique character like Ponkidoodle.

Draw your character's head in this rectangle. Make sure your character's head joins with the neck already drawn.

Draw your character's body in this rectangle. Make sure your character's body and waist join with the neck and waist I've already drawn.

Draw your character's legs in this rectangle. Make sure your character's legs join the waist I've already drawn.

Put three containers out the front of the room. Label one container heads, one body and one legs. Ask everyone to cut out each section of their character and put them into the correct container. Give the containers a shake so all the sections are jumbled up.

Each person now walks out the front and, with their eyes closed, randomly picks a new head, body and legs. They then stick the three pieces together to make a new character!

When you have stuck down your new character:

1. Give it a name.
2. Write three things it likes to do.
3. Write a paragraph describing what your character does one night.
